Japan & China: Ancient & Modern Connections

With Harvard professors Peter Bol & Andrew Gordon

May 8 - 22, 2017

EXPLORE THE TIES OF TWO ANCIENT EMPIRES

By Peter Bol and Andrew Gordon

China and Japan have been connected for 1500 years through language, religion, trade and the organization of politics and society. The square layout of Chang'an, the great capital of medieval China, became the model for the capitals of Nara and Kyoto. Chinese schools of Buddhism found a welcome in Japan, and a stream of officials, merchants, and monks moved between the two lands. We will visit the great buildings and gardens that commemorate these early exchanges and see for ourselves the many ways in which they are connected still today. In modern times, the cultural and power flows shifted, as modernizing Japan of the late 19th century became a model for—and a threat to—late imperial China. Tokyo and Shanghai will serve as locations to explore these more recent interactions.

Yet for all these strong ties, the two countries have remained distinct; their cultural trajectories have diverged. Japan maintained a single unbroken imperial line while the government changed; Chinese history was broken by dynastic change and foreign invasion. In daily life, nowhere is the difference more evident in a way we can appreciate than in the cuisines of Japan and China, which we intend to sample every day of the trip. This tour is a chance to explore how two great cultures have developed from ancient times into the present. We will learn how and why they have diverged, what they have gained from each other, and how they continue to challenge and compete with each other in peace and war of modern times.
