3:30–5:00 PM  Faculty Speaker: Professor Venkatesh Murthy, on “Artificial and Natural Intelligence”
Professor Murthy is the Raymond Leo Erikson Life Sciences Prof. of Molecular & Cellular Biology, Director of Harvard’s Center for Brain Science, and Co-Chair of the Graduate Program in Biophysics. His talk begins with the basic inquiry: What is intelligence? For animals, including humans, this is characterized by flexible problem solving with limited information. Machine intelligence includes everything from voice recognizing smartphones to game-playing computers, and more. Many of us think that a comparative study of animal and machine intelligence will be fruitful for understanding both. Importantly, as machines increasingly perform tasks that were once thought to be solely in the domain of humans, there is an urgent need for discussions of the moral and societal implications of artificial intelligence.

5:00–6:00 PM  Social Hour
Unstructured time to catch-up with classmates
Thursday, June 3

11:30—1:00 PM
Classmate Panel: Avis Bohlen ’61 and James Collins ’61 on The Euro-Atlantic Community: Challenges and Opportunities
Jim Collins and Avis Bohlen, our classmates, both had careers in the U.S. Foreign Service which spanned the last decades of the Cold War, the end of the USSR and its Eastern European empire, and the emergence of a new Euro-Atlantic order. Each served as ambassador during the critical period of transition from the twentieth century’s bi-polar world order based on a divided Europe and the new global system that began to emerge with the new millennium.

Regarded as leading experts on national security affairs and American engagement with the NATO allies, the Russian Federation, and the newly independent states of Eastern Europe in the post-Soviet period, Avis and Jim will discuss questions raised by panel moderator Matthew (Matt) Rojansky (Harvard ’02), and by you our classmates. They will focus on the challenges and opportunities facing the U.S. in today’s “Euro-Atlantic” world and a new global environment and will reflect on the changes they have seen during careers spanning more than a half century.
